MIBOR and MIBID: THE FINANCIAL FUNCTIONS OF RBI

Reserve Bank of India (RBI) acts as a regulator and supervisor of the overall financial system in India. It manages Foreign Exchanges under FEMA Act 1999, injects public confidence into the national financial system, protects interest rates and provides positive banking alternatives to the public with safeguard. It is the issuer of national currency. Its new department since July, 2005 named Financial market Department has been constituted for surveillance on financial markets and to separate debt management and monetary operations. A person of business, commerce, economic or related academic background very well knows that RBI is the banker to the Government. It functions a controller to the credit, custodian of the foreign reserves issuer of notes and act as banker of the banks. Being banker of the banks, RBI has since 1998 initiated the Mumbai Interbank Offer Rate (MIBOR) and the Mumbai Interbank Bid Rate (MIBID).

MIBOR is interbank rate, which is the rate of interest charged by a bank on a short-term loan to another bank. It is used in conjunction with the Mumbai Interbank Bid and Forward rates to set short-term monetary policy. MIBOR is calculated based on input from a panel of 30 banks and primary dealers. It is calculated every day by the National Stock Exchange of India (NSEIL) as a weighted average of lending rates of a group of major banks throughout India, on funds lent to first class borrowers. This is the interest rate at which banks can borrow funds from other banks in the Indian Interbank market.

MIBID is the interest rate that one participating bank would pay to the other to attract the deposit of funds. MIBID would be lower than the interest rate offered to those wanting to borrow funds, i.e. MIBOR. It is to provide the bank a profit from the spread of interest earned and paid. The MIBID is usually lower than the MIBOR because banks will try to pay less interest after taking loans and will try to get more interest while offering loans. Together, the MIBID and MIBOR constitute a bid-offer spread for Indian overnight lending rates.
